Good Answers To Tough Questions About Substance Abuse

Synopsis

Recommended for ages 6-12 There is more to understanding the problem than, "Just Saying No." • Knowing the dangers and temptations of substance abuse is the first step toward prevention. In Good Answers to Tough Questions About Substance Abuse, Joy Berry lays it out and explains both of these in kid-friendly terms. Unfortunately, in today's world it is never too early to begin this discussion with your children. This book can help you open communication on a tough subject that very well may be a significant factor in the decision about substance abuse your child will have to make. The combination of cartoons and text makes this book something your child will both enjoy and find very helpful. Topics covered include:

- Important terms you should know
- Nonprescription and prescription drugs
- Why you might be tempted to abuse drugs
- Why you should not abuse drugs

Customer Reviews

The author has sold more than 85 million books which discuss the issues parents and children face daily. This particular volume is certainly one of the best and most important, in my opinion. The author takes a non biased analytical approach to present information in a nonjudgmental way allowing the reader to make an informed decision. First, Berry points out the items you need to know. There are prescription and non-prescription drugs. She discusses the reasons one is tempted and the reasons one should not use them. The author explains how to avoid abusing them and how to say no to drugs if you don't want them. She emphasizes the fact that our environment contains both good and bad things. When you use them in a positive way, you make your life better. Drugs are neither good nor bad in themselves. If you decide to abuse drugs, your body becomes dependent on them, and you become physically and psychologically addicted. Berry then discusses almost every type of substance abuse including alcohol, marijuana, cocaine, hallucinogens, sedatives, tranquilizers, opiates, and even glues, liquids, and chemicals. Then Berry lists the long and short term effects of each. She discusses the reasons people decide to abuse these drugs, the reasons for avoiding them and how to avoid getting into these situations. She suggests that teens shun situations that don't represent their life style and things like clothing, movies and posters that feature such abuse. Berry details the exact way to handle these situations with actual suggestions on what to say and do. Her bottom line is that you can always ask for the support of parents or friends. No one plans to become an addict. At the same time, no one can force you to to drugs. It is YOUR
